Editorial JCM March 2007

The Journal of Chiropractic Medicine: improvements for 2007

The Journal of Chiropractic Medicine is now celebrating its sixth year of publication. We are pleased to announce several significant changes and improvements to the journal.

For the past several years, the editorial staff has been working diligently to make continued and substantial improvements to the journal. For the year 2007, we welcome Elsevier as our new publisher. Joining with Elsevier brings many improvements to the journal including:

1. Indexing in Science Direct—allows broader access to our articles for journal readers and researchers
2. New and updated Web site—provides easier access to current contents, a free table of contents service, and allows access to interesting articles in the back issues
3. Online manuscript submissions—increases ease of the submission process for authors, allowing them to track their submission throughout the entire process
4. Online peer review process—provides peer reviewers an easier method of doing peer review and submitting their ratings and comments
5. New cover design—increases the professional look of the journal, the imagery capturing potential aspects of chiropractic care
6. New and improved article format—improves readability and presentation of the journal articles
7. Updated editorial board—includes additional experts and international members that will broaden the expertise of peer review

Our goal is to continue to improve the quality of contents and make the Journal of Chiropractic Medicine one of the most practical and usable chiropractic journals published in the world. I hope that you will enjoy the improvements that have been made and look forward to hearing your feedback or comments about any additional improvements.
