A somnolent man found in the park

C. Pieters · S. W. E. van de Poll

Published online: 14 August 2012
© Springer Media / Bohn Stafleu van Loghum 2012

A 47-year-old homeless man with a history of alcohol abuse was presented to the Emergency Department after being found in the park, lying in a pool of water. On neurological examination he was somnolent, but with a maximum score on the Glasgow Coma Scale.

The following electrocardiogram was recorded (Fig. 1). What is your interpretation of the ECG? What is the diagnosis?

Answer

You will find the answer elsewhere in this issue.

Fig. 1 ECG on admission

C. Pieters · S. W. E. van de Poll (✉)
Department of Cardiology, Sint Franciscus Gasthuis, Kleiweg 500, 3045 PM Rotterdam,
the Netherlands
e-mail: s.vandepoll@sfg.nl