The editorial “Duplicate Submission and Dual Publication: What Is So Wrong With Them?” [Clin Orthop Relat Res. 2013; 471(5): 1401–1402] incorrectly indicated that the guidelines issued by the Committee on Publication Ethics (COPE) recommend sanctions to authors of redundant publications. The portion of the editorial in question should have read:

“Penalties for duplicate submission can, and do, change the trajectories of investigators’ careers. For example, the Committee on Publication Ethics (COPE) recommends journals consider communication with authors’ academic departments for those who engage in dual submissions [1]. At CORR®, we endorse COPE’s standards. Some journals, including CORR®, have further sanctioned authors for this kind of scientific misconduct, as well.”

We regret this error.
